Halloween Celebrants

Even the famous Quints and papa Dionne were there but the first prize for costumes went to Elmer Wiehn, an attractive 'flapper' in a glamorous green formal with complete accessories.

Orange and black streamers, balloons and various noise-makers provided the background for hilarious stunt games and dancing. After the motley group made nocturnal calls in the neighborhood even the ghosts and goblins enjoyed the donuts and coffee.

On the eve of Halloween Miss Barbara Richards entertained thirteen couples with a tacky dance at her home, 4706 Amaryllis street.

Jack-o-lanterns lighted the garden and the harvest theme was used in decorating the 'barn,' or garage, with corn shocks and pumpkins.

Games varied the dancing, a pumpkin pie being the prize, going to the following winners in a scavenger hunt: Patsy Stose, Jack Kelly, Steve Porter and Alpha Stephens.

The carnival spirit ran high in the Halloween frolic arranged by Miss Amy Collier, 4578 Muir avenue, for twenty members of the high school and college group last Saturday evening. The hostess was assisted by her mother, Mrs. Walter B. Collier, and her sister Miss Anna Collier.

Europeans Are Lining Up, Communists vs. Fascists

JUST about everything necessary to a general European war is now ready. At this distance it seems that Josef Stalin, dictator of Soviet Russia, will be the man to fire the starting pistol; and he is reported to be convinced that another great conflict is unavoidable. The nations of the continent are lining up as Communist or Fascist, either in the constitution of their governments or in their active sympathies. The immediate occasion for their disputes is the civil war in Spain. Nearly all the continental governments and that of Great Britain joined in an agreement of nonintervention, but that pact is about played out. Russia, accusing Portugal, Germany and Italy of aiding the Fascist Spanish rebels, has denounced the agreement and declared she reserves freedom to help the Madrid government; the accused nations deny the Soviet charges and retort that Russia already has sent many shiploads of war supplies and munitions to the Spanish loyalists. At least three ships, alleged to be Russian and laden with munitions for Madrid, have been bombed by insurgent planes.

Josef Stalin

Portugal severed diplomatic relations with the Madrid government, and the representatives of the two countries were recalled. Dr. Armindo Monteiro, Portuguese foreign minister, followed up this action by sending to Lord Plymouth, British chairman of the nonintervention committee, a long document accusing Russia of having planned and brought about the Spanish civil war. He named the Russian diplomats, agitators and soldiers who, he charged, were directing the operations. He alleged that Moscow sought to start a revolution in Portugal and thus provide a base for attacking General Franco's insurgent forces in the rear.

Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy have buried their differences for the time being and reached an agreement on a united policy. This was outlined in a communique published after Italian Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano had conferred with Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler. In the first place Hitler and Mussolini inform the world that they intend to recognize the insurgent government headed by General Franco as the legitimate regime in Spain, but they promise to respect the terms of the nonintervention agreement.

Other important declarations of policy by the two states are:

1. Co-operation to protect the peace of Europe and "the holy riches of European civilization" and family life.

2. Endorsement of a conference to rewrite the Locarno pact guaranteeing European borders, but only in the west. This implied that neither would agree to Soviet Russia's presence at the meeting.

3. Co-operation for the rehabilitation of the Danubian countries.

In one clause of the agreement Germany recognizes Italy's sovereignty over Ethiopia.

U. S. Submachine Guns for French Fascists?

POPULAIRE, the organ of Premier Leon Blum's Socialist party, alleges that a shipment of submachine guns from the United States has been added to the secret armaments of the Croux de Feu in preparation for a civil war in France. The Croix de Feu, a Fascist organization headed by Col. Francois de la Rocque, was dissolved recently by the government and was succeeded by the new Social party.

Populaire, referring to the submachine guns, said these "terrible weapons used by American gangsters" arrived from America through the port of Havre and through Holland. The paper added that the weapons are being planted in caches in Normandie and elsewhere in the north of France. Furthermore, according to Populaire, great quantities of tear gas bombs and tear gas pistols are arriving from Germany for the use of the Fascists.

Mussolini Holds "Eternal" Peace Is Absurd

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, talking at Bologna, said that Italy's "olive branch grows out of an immense forest of 8,000,000 bayonets"; and next day at Imola he told 70,000 listeners that he hoped for long periods of peace, but not for "eternal peace, which is absurd and impossible."

"The Italian people, which gave its blood for the empire, is ready for any other trial when the crucial hour approaches," the Fascist chief shouted. "In order to make peace—just as to make love—it is necessary that there be two."

Spanish Rebels Pushing Toward the Capital

GENERAL FRANCO, head of the Spanish insurgents, ordered the immediate taking of Madrid and each day the state of the defenders of the capital became more desperate. The rebels closed in relentlessly, making effective use of bombing planes and armored tanks.

President Manuel Azana and some of his cabinet ministers slipped out of Madrid and appeared in Barcelona. Ostensibly they were making a tour of the loyalist fronts, but the general opinion was that they had fled from the capital to make a "last stand" in Catalonia, which province always is radical. Anyhow, Azana took over an office in the Catalan parliament building for himself and his secretarial staff. Senora Azana has quit Spain. She appeared in Toulouse, France, and departed for an unannounced destination.

British Government Curbs Oswald Mosley

GREAT BRITAIN is determined to keep out of the Communist-Fascist conflict if possible. Sir Oswald Mosley and his black-shirted Fascist followers have been trying to stir up trouble in England and in consequence the cabinet decided to put a ban on all political uniforms. It was expected that when parliament reassembled the government would announce drastic action to suppress the Mosley organization or at least to put a stop to its demonstrations and parades in Leeds, Manchester and the east end of London, where these Fascists like to create ugly feeling against Jews.

Sir Oswald Mosley

The public demand in England for action against the Fascists has been strengthened by the revelation that Mosley takes his advice from Berlin and Rome. It is reported, and widely believed, that Mosley's tactics of deliberately leading his Blackshirts into Jewish communities are based on advice given him by Paul Joseph Goebels, Hitler's propaganda minister.

Labor Conference Will Assemble on Nov. 9

SECRETARY OF LABOR FRANCES PERKINS announced that the third national conference on labor legislation, designed to stimulate the raising of work standards through federal and state co-operative efforts, will be called into session in Washington on November 9, and will last three days.

Governors of all the states have been asked to send official delegates including labor commissioners. Private individuals who have special knowledge of labor problems have been invited to attend the conference.

Green's Big Fortune Moved to a Bank

EIGHT armored cars escorted by armed private guards and state police, carried a fortune of $25,000,000 from the estate of the late Col. E. H. R. Green in South Dartmouth, Mass., to the First National bank of Boston. There it will be stored in vaults until legal actions may be taken to obtain income and inheritance taxes for the state of Massachusetts.

The fortune, which consists of the famous coin collection, valued at 5 millions; the stamp collection, valued at 3½ millions; a large amount of cash and securities, and a quantity of uncut diamonds, has been under constant guard at the Green home since his death.

Supreme Court to Pass on Wagner Labor Act

BEFORE taking a recess of two weeks the United States Supreme court announced that it would review and hand down a decision at this term upon the Wagner labor relations act. Many lawyers believe this law will be held unconstitutional, for in the Guffey coal act decision the Supreme court held that the relationship between employers and employees was local and beyond the power of congressional regulation.

Browder Not Allowed to Talk in Tampa

TERRE HAUTE is not the only town that refuses to listen to Earl Browder, the Presidential candidate of the Communist party. Browder went to Tampa to deliver a campaign speech but as he began talking a group of men violently broke up the meeting and upset the speaker's stand. The leader of the attacking crowd denied that their action was sponsored by any organization, saying "We are just a group of red-blooded American citizens."

Senator James Couzens of Michigan Dies

JAMES COUZENS, independent Republican senator from Michigan, died in a Detroit hospital after a long illness and immediately following an operation to relieve uremic poisoning. He was sixty-four years old.

Mr. Couzens was one of the wealthiest men in congress, his riches being a result of early association with Henry Ford in the automobile business. He was twice elected mayor of Detroit and was appointed to the senate in 1922 to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Truman H. Newberry. As a senator he frequently disregarded party lines, and since the election of President Roosevelt he had supported many New Deal measures. Before the recent primary he announced that, though a candidate for renomination as a Republican, he intended to support Mr. Roosevelt for re-election. This was an act of political suicide, and he was defeated by Wilbert M. Brucker

Supporter of Chiang Slain in Hankow

GENERAL YANG YUNG-TAI, governor of Hupeh province and one of Dictator Chiang Kai-shek's strongest supporters, was assassinated in Hankow by a Chinese youth.

Yang was a close associate of Chiang Kai-shek and for some time was his personal secretary. He was appointed civil governor of Canton in 1920 and earlier was associated with President Sun Yat Sen. He was appointed governor of Hupeh province last December.

Foes of Alcoholism Meet in Pueblo

THE first Mexican national congress against alcoholism opened its sessions in Pueblo, and the first address was delivered by Josephus Daniels, the American ambassador, who during his tenure as secretary of the navy ordered all alcoholic liquors removed from American naval ships. On the first day of the convention all liquor stores throughout Mexico were closed by order of the government.

Zephyr Train Sets New World Speed Record

SETTING a new world's long distance train speed record, the Burlington railway's streamlined steel Denver Zephyr made a nonstop run from Chicago to Denver in 12 hours 12 minutes and 27 seconds. The distance is 1,017 miles, so the average speed was 83.4 miles an hour. After crossing the Colorado border the train hit its top speed of 116 miles an hour, which was maintained for one mile.

Belgian Fascists Plan March on Brussels

BELGIAN Fascists, known as Rexists and led by Leon Degrelle, clashed with the police in Brussels and Degrelle was jailed for a night. He said the motive of his demonstration was to show that ex-soldiers were backing the Rexists, and he announced that he would carry out his threatened "march on Brussels" with 150,000 followers and overthrow the government.

Labor's Quarrel May Be Handled at Convention

PEACE within the ranks of the American Federation of Labor has not yet been achieved, for the executive council of that body adjourned without settling the dispute between the Green and Lewis factions. The council will meet again November 14 in Tampa, and two days later the federation will open its annual convention in that Florida city. If there are developments meanwhile, the council or federation may discuss the quarrel, according to President Green. He said: "The matter is temporarily closed," and added that so far as he knew, no peace overtures had been made by the CIO leaders. Mr. Green declared the ten suspended unions could not be admitted to the convention.

Indictment of Five Is Echo of Lindbergh Case

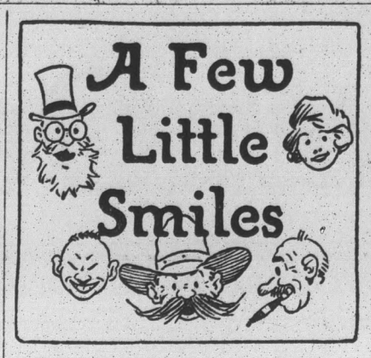
AN AFTERMATH of the Lindbergh kidnaping case is the indictment of Ellis H. Parker, chief of detectives of Burlington county, N. J.; his son and three other men by a federal grand jury at Newark, N. J. The indictment charges the defendants took possession of Paul H. Wendel in New York, forced him to confess that he kidnaped Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., and held him in New Jersey while revisions were made in the confessions as the older Parker ordered.

President Questions Engineering Schools

IT WAS announced at the White House that President Roosevelt had written to heads of 100 schools and colleges throughout the country asking the educators to determine whether courses at engineering schools are so "balanced" as to give students the necessary "vision and flexible technical capacity."

The "impact" of science on human life produces social dislocations as well as advances in productive power, he held. He mentioned "unemployment, bankruptcies and relief." The engineer, he said, has a responsibility to help design "mechanisms to absorb the shocks of the impact of science."

A Few Little Smiles



HANDICAPPED BY NATURE

A short man entered the gymnasium and nervously approached the instructor.

"I want you to make my arms longer," he whispered. "Do you think you can do it?"

The instructor looked puzzled.

"But they are in proportion!" he exclaimed. "Why do you want them altered?"

"I know they're in proportion," said the short man, "but they're too short for my purpose. I can't hold my own at the Anglers' Club."

WRONG AGAIN

"That fellow is a Bolshevist in disguise."

"Nonsense! A Bolshevist never disguises. He advertises."

A Breathing Spell

"Did you have a pleasant vacation?" said the constituent.

"Yes," said Senator Sorghum. "I attended a dozen picnics and made seventeen speeches."

"Do you call that a vacation?"

"Certainly. It's a great deal easier than staying in an office while disappointed constituents line up and take turns at giving me the third degree."

Like Father Like Son

The teacher was having her trials and finally wrote the mother: "Your son is the brightest boy in my class, but he is also the most mischievous. What shall I do?"

The reply came back: "Do as you please; I am having my own troubles with his father."

Word of a Connoisseur

"How do you judge a watermelon?"

"Mostly by de size," replied Mr. Erastus Pinkley. "All watermelons is good. De superiority is regulated by de room available foh expansion."

A Concession

"So you suspect that men are quicker of judgement in practical matters than women."

Grant's Birthplace Returned to Original Site

The little cabin where Ulysses Simpson Grant first saw the light of day has been returned to its original site with appropriate ceremonies. For many years the cabin stood on the grounds of the state capital at Columbus, Ohio. It has now been returned to Point Pleasant, 30 miles east of Cincinnati. The birthplace of the baby who grew to be "Unconditional Surrender" Grant of Civil war fame and eighteenth President of the United States, is the simple little white building at the right of this picture.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A DEN OF ROBBERS

WHEN Billy Mink started to explore the big barn in the farmyard where he had decided to stay for a while he didn't know that he was entering a den of robbers. But that is what he was doing. Yes, sir, that is just what he was doing. You see, that barn was the home of ever and ever so many of the tribe of Robber the Rat, and each one of them, big and little, was a robber. They lived by robbery, which, you know, is another name for stealing.

Now those robbers had lived in that big barn so long that they had come to look on it as belonging to them. They knew every nook and corner and cranny in it and under it. The farmer who owned it had tried his best to drive them away. But those robber rats simply laughed at all his efforts. They were smart. Oh, yes, indeed, they were smart. Robbers often are quite as smart as honest people. They were too smart for that farmer.

All those rats belonged to the Brown Rat tribe. Not that they were all brown. The fact is, the older ones were quite gray. But that was because they were old and had grown gray with age.

Not all rats are bad. There are Brushtail the Wood Rat and Miser the Trade Rat and their families. They are honest and respected by their neighbors. But all the Brown tribe are outcasts, despised by all the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, and hated by man. There is no good in them. They become robbers as soon as they can run about, and they remain robbers as long as they live.

There is not an honest hair on one of them. They hate the sunlight, for their deeds are deeds of darkness. They are savage.

But with all this, they are clever, very clever indeed. They are so clever that in spite of all man's efforts to kill them their tribe has increased until it is probably the largest tribe of little people who wear fur in all the world, excepting the Mouse tribe.

The farmer who owned that barn had set traps of many kinds, but the wise old leader of the rats had found each trap and warned all his relatives. The farmer had tried to poison them, but somehow their wise old leader always knew where the poison was and warned them against it. A cat had been brought to catch them, but the tough old fighters among the rats had driven the cat out.

So, the rats had increased and the greater the numbers the more they stole. They gnawed holes wherever there was a chance of getting food. They got into the farmer's house and did great damage there. In the spring they killed young chickens in the henhouse. They stole eggs. In fact, these robbers did about as they pleased and the big barn was their den.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

HINTS ON FOODS

THE preparation of a leftover into something appetizing takes vastly more thought than to produce an ordinary dish, which is one of the reasons why such dishes are not acceptable; they are prepared with too little thought.

There is something out of balance with a person who cannot enjoy with a thrill, crisp, well-blended salads, or well-cooked and seasoned vegetables; but no one can be blamed for refusing unattractive food. Because the male members of the family shy at anything reheated, made over, or rehashed, the problem of carefully conserving good foods and giving them back in an acceptable form is one which takes more finesse than a hand of bridge.

One reason that many men balk at salads is because they have been often used as a clearing house for leftovers.

Children will learn to like almost any kind of vegetable if it is not discussed pro and con every time it appears. Children are people, and when we learn to respect their feelings as we would older ones, they will respond accordingly, usually.

When teaching a child to eat a new dish, make it as attractive as possible in appearance and so tasty that it will not disappoint, and you will never have to urge the food upon an unwilling child.

Children need whole wheat; other cereals may be used for variety. They need fat—butterfat is the best of all fats to promote growth. The child needs milk, at least a quart a day in some form; sugar in moderate amount and candy after a meal or between meals so that it will not destroy his appetite for the coming meal. Plenty of fruit and fresh vegetables are needed in all diets, and especially in the child's.

Another food that a well-nourished child needs is fresh eggs; serve one in some form each day for each child. Well-cooked rice, fresh fish, poultry, are all good foods for the growing child.

WORK YOUR GARDEN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

UNLESS you work your garden
You can't expect a rose,
The poorest little pansy flow'r,
Or anything that grows.
Unless you work a little
But little you will win,
For all that's worth the having comes
To those who toil and spin.

Unless you work your garden
You can't expect the joy
Of those who grow the growing things
That busy hands employ.
Unless you give a little
But little will be yours,
Although you live a life of ease,
But little that endures.

Unless you work your garden
You can't expect to reap
The things that are the beautiful,
Or friends that you can keep.
Unless you love a little
And kindly say and do,
The rose of life will be for some,
The weeds of life for you.

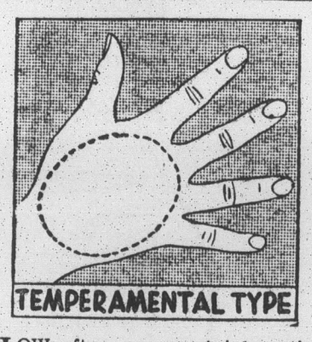
THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.



HOW often you meet interesting people, socially or in business, whose true traits and character you would give almost anything to see delineated. This isn't difficult if you are on speaking terms with the language of the hand. But before you attempt a verdict, be sure that you are familiar with the characteristics of type.

The Temperamental Type of Hand

Graceful symmetry is the outstanding feature of this type. The fingers, particularly, impress the observer with their smoothness and delicate modeling from root to nail tip. Hands of the temperamental type are in general quite small, though there may be exceptions to the rule; are plump but not overfleshed and have a responsive, resilient feel when grasped.

The fingers of this type are of moderate length in proportion to the length of palm, which is usually neither square nor elongated, but rather full and oval in shape. The thumb, like the fingers, is well proportioned, of moderate length, and in many instances has a markedly tapered nail joint, with the joint below it of unusual slenderness and sometimes corseted in appearance.

The firm hand of temperamental type indicates the emotional, dramatically inclined, artistic man or woman, with far greater endowments along these lines than average. But if overfleshed, the indications are that indolence and love of ease will be serious drawbacks to emotional and artistic expression.

Possessors of the temperamental type of hand are natural artists and actors, who, although they may never follow their natural inclinations, nevertheless are only truly happy when in an artistic or "dramatic" environment.

An especially gratifying result of Tuesday's election was the great number of votes cast, favoring President Roosevelt and the new deal, in spite of the campaign of deliberate falsehoods carried on by such old standpatters as Hamilton and Knox. We trust that it will never again be necessary to go to such extremes by men who are supposed to stand as leaders in our national life. Practically every daily paper of the country too, owned and supported by big business and large corporations, lent every avenue at their disposal to spread their propaganda in every issue, seldom being fair to the administration and our great President.

To look back over the leading San Diego dailies of the past two weeks and seeing the blather of Hamilton-Knox and Al Smith, we certainly are thankful that the public generally was not so gullible as these men had supposed, for little impression apparently was made by these prejudiced newspapers who need a lesson in square dealing and the Golden Rule.

Now the elections are thru and the nation is ready to settle down to a more sane and ordered life, however, many involved and bewildering problems still remain before us, crying for orderly solution. The election was not a goal in itself, and its result has not removed many problems. These must be tackled with renewed vigor, so let's add our weight to the great push forward that will bring the nation to a steady. lasting prosperity, beyond anything we have heretofore known.

"REMEMBER FLANDERS FIELD!"

Heralds of the White Flag of Truce, ending the World's War, were flashed over the nations on the eleventh month, the 11th day, the eleventh hour and the eleventh minute of that notable morning, eighteen years ago. The joybells of peace rang out like sweet music from a thousand voices in concert, chiming gratitude and good tidings that war was over.

Armistice Day is the greatest and grandest lesson on world peace ever known. We do not regard this significant lesson enough as Kipling says; "Lest we forget." Belligerent powers have forgotten this lesson of peace taught by that armistice eventful morning, the most historical proclamation ever given out. But the anniversary we celebrate this year has a larger and deeper significance. It marks the cessation of nearly five years of armed struggle, too deplorable to relate; it also marked the beginning of peace, which should never be forgotten, as an everlasting world peace.

Let us hope that in another generation, Armistice Day will come to be universally regarded as The Anniversary of World Peace! There is hope, as difficult as peace seems today; even 18 years ago, when war to end war, is being ably carried on with very positive progress toward favorable results.

Peace-to-End-War can begin today. If the peace-desiring people bring right thinking to bear. A mighty move to banish war, even while it is defeating an aggressor, will succeed beyond men's brightest dreams. Thus could be retrieved the hopes of 18 long years. Thus could be regained out of the reparable past the World War's dearest promise. Thus would be repaid at last humanity's debt to the 10,000,000 buddies who sleep on Flanders' Field.

CELEBRATING "EDUCATIONAL WEEK"

One of the extraordinary privileges for the people is that of celebrating "Educational Week", beginning November 9th. This is a very thoughtful expression on the part of American civilization. We cannot place too high value on education, the bulwark of society's progress.

California has a worthy record of her entire school system. The state has enjoyed an enviable reputation in all its history, dealing with the great army of pupils and students. In the intermediate department there are over 70,000 children cared for by 2,100 buses. high schools and colleges and universities are both unique and unequalled for a state the size of California.

Taking the nation as a whole, education is considered an indispensable need. Think what a power education is in the land; an army of over 33,000,000 learners—boys, girls and adults. This number is greater than the combined population of New York State, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Heading this army are 1,018,000 teachers, of which one-fourth are men. Yet we have almost 4,000,000 illiterates in the country. The goverment during the past year inaugurated a drive to reduce this figure. using radio, pamphlets and school room experiments.

School districts number 127,000, and 28,000 high schools. There are 1,000,000 Negro children of school age, not in school. Nearly 40 per cent of Negro schools have benches but no desks. More than 75,000 Indians are enrolled in public schools The nation's school property is valued at $12,050,000,000. With all these interesting statistics, the educational march continues to advance with increasing numbers every year.

There is no relationship that can, or ever will, equal the intimate, mystic bond existing between father and son; therefore we are to celebrate "Father and Son Week" November 6th to 13th. If you desire to know any further evidence concerning this harmonious kinship, just ask the average boy about "Dad." Theodore Roosevelt said: "Thank God for the iron hand in the blood of our fathers;" but Wardsworth said: "The child is father of the man." Father and Son Week has a deeper significance too few realize. The boy's home life is a grave responsibility weighing on the chief executive of the home. Any boy enjoys a frolic with Daddy, and when he gets a few years older, it almost always is sure to be, "Dad and me are pals."

Ocean Beach School News

Ocean Beach School faculty and PTA extend a cordial invitation to parents and friends of the school to visit the rooms Monday night, November 9, from 7:00 to 8:00 and to attend the program in the auditorium from 8:00 to 9:00 where seven outstanding speakers will contribute to a panel discussion on "Problems of Pupil Progress". Since the San Diego school system is just beginning the annual promotion policy this topic is of interest to everyone.

Visiting principals and members of the panel will be introduced by Miss Martha T. Farnum, principal of Ocean Beach school. Mrs. Esther Wisdom president of the PTA will preside at the opening of the meeting and suggests that necessary business be dispensed with to give the panel the maximum time.

Members of the panel will be: William J. Hawks, principal of Florence school, chairman of the panel; Ellis D. Dugger, principal of Pacific Beach school; Miss Louise E. Weller, principal of Benjamine Franklin school; Terrence B. Geddis, principal of Andrew Jackson and Rest Haven schools; Miss Bertha Trowbridge, director of Bureau of Child reference and counsel and Mrs. W. F. Fay, president of the San Diego council of PTA.

Questions to be raised will include a chracterization of our changing curriculum and different methods of classification and rating pupils under it; (1) What have we learned about the psychological growth of a child which would modify our educative process? (2) What have we learned about the biological growth of a child which would modify our educative process? (3) Should we measure children with the same yard stick and measure them accordingly? (4) What are going to be our criteria for success? (5) What should constitute the new curriculum? (6) Is our present school organization the best to serve our puposes?

Besides the open house and community meeting Monday night, each room is to have a program and tea during American Education Week, Nov. 9-13. Mothers will be notified by their children of individual room programs.

The children in Miss Neal's L-4 grade will give a demonstration in rhythmic plays, Monday morning at 11 o'clock in the school auditorium. Parents and friends are cordially invited to attend.

In a decidedly quiet game marked with a flash of real action only occasionally, the Point Loma high school football team defeated La Jolla high's Vikings 20-0 last Friday at Ross field. Fumbles and injuries detracted considerably from the interest of the game. Qualin, Loman half, played a smashing game, scoring two of the touchdowns before an arm injury took him out of the fray.

In the first quarter, Qualin took the ball on a double reverse and raced 22 yards to a touchdown Lutes failed to convert. In the second qurter Qualin took a pass and carried it 25 yards to the goal, Lutes converted.

Isom plunged over in the last period and Lutes converted.

Today, Friday, the Lomans travel to Escondido to engage in their toughest game of the season. Point Looma and Escondido are tied for the Metro loop lead and the out come will undoubtedly decide the 1936 champions.

PTA Program Monday

American Education Week is again with us. Celebrating this, Ocean Beach parents and teachers will hold open house and a community meeting in the school at the corner of Sunset Cliffs and Santa Monica, on November 9.

Weather permitting, there will be music in the patio from seven to eight as the parents and friends visit the school rooms inspecting the work of the children.

At eight all will gather in the auditorium for a panel discussion on "Problems of Pupil Progress" which will include a discussion of our changing curriculum and different methods of classifying and rating pupils under it. The panel, comprised of principals of five different schools; Miss Bertha Trowbridge, director Bureau of Child Reference and Counsel; and Mrs. W. S. Fay, president San Diego council PTA; will be introduced by Miss Martha Farnum, principal of Ocean Beach school.

Warren-Walker School

Nancy and Tickie Read are spending a month at Vallejo where their father, Lt. H. T. Read, is stationed. They will return to Warren-Walker school the first of December.

The Spanish class under the direction of Miss Ruth Bradley is learning salutations, days of the week and phrases using them, numbers and expressions of courtesy.

Besides memorizing songs the music classes are having sight singing and listening lessons and are learning rhythm discrimination between marches and waltzes.

Mrs. Walker received a letter from Mrs. J. R. Haskin jr. who is now living in Philadelphia. Her daughter, Robin, attended Warren-Walker school last year. Mrs. Haskin said she searched for a school in Philadelphia similar to the Warren-Walker school and found it in Miss Sayward's school for girls. Robin is continuing her work there.

Letting Them Know

Sandy joined a golf club, and was told by the professional that if his name was on his golfballs and they were lost they would be returned to him when found.

"Good," said the Scot, "put my name on this ball."

The pro did so.

"Would you also put M. D. after it?" said the new member. "I'm a doctor." The pro obeyed.

"There's just one more thing, can ye squeeze 'Hours 10 to 3' on as well?"—Bee Hive.

Masterful Man

They were walking along North Main street and paused in the glare of a brightly lighted jewelry store. Unlike her escort, she seemed in no hurry to continue.

"Look," she said, "did you ever see such good looking engagement rings for such a low price?"

He was the masterful type. Taking her arm firmly, he answered: "Uh-huh. But look over here Isn't that a swell radio for only $11.95?"

"That's where we got caught—right there," cried the barber. "We got back to the ponies an' had to cut across a piece of burned timber to get out. A dead limb from one of the trees fell on me. I went down with the pony. When I kicked loose, the pony bolted, an' when I tried to get up, my leg was broke.

"There we was, Doc. Panama's pony couldn't carry double. The fire was creepin' up on two sides of us. It was terrible, Doc—that's all a man can say, just terrible. We couldn't hardly hear us talk. Panama picked me up to set me on his pony. 'No!' I yells. 'It won't do, Panama, an' you know it. I'm done, Panama. Save yourself. You ain't got a minute to lose. Get back on your horse and run for it.'

"'Shut up, Jake,' Panama yells. 'Get up on that pony!' I tried to fight it out with him—but I was crazy with pain 'n' couldn't handle myself, neither. He lifted me on his pony, stuck the lines in my hands. 'Beat it,' he yelled. 'What'll you do?' says I. 'I've got good legs, I'll run,' he says."

A melancholy procession took the desert road that night for Sleepy Cat. In the wagon lay Panama; beside him lay his injured friend, Spotts—Jake would have it no other way.

In town, next day, the boys tried vainly to figure out some sort of a decent burial service for Panama. The best coffin to be had in Medicine Bend was ordered by telegraph to reach Sleepy Cat on train Number One.

"I've got it," exclaimed Jeff Sollers, who was sitting near Carpy. He slapped the doctor's knee. "We'll have the old Doc himself make a few remarks over Panama."

"No."

"Yes."

"Hell, no! I won't do it," growled Carpy.

They all set on him. "Yes, you will."

Carpy was inflexible. "Boys, you might just as well shut up."

"But why won't you?"

"Well, I tell you. I'm just another bum, like poor Panama—that's all. You needn't yell—I know. The way I look at it is this: Nothing in Panama's life became him like the leaving of it. Surely no man could die a nobler death than Panama's. Now I want to see a man who lives a life like Panama's death say a few words over Panama, and I'm going to try to get him to do it. Who? The old padre over on the Reservation."

"But he won't do it. Panama didn't belong to his church!"

"That doesn't make a d—d bit of difference, boys. The padre knew Panama. He knows me. He will do it—if we're lucky enough to catch him at home and not away fifty miles on a sick call. I've done a few things for Padre Cataldo. I know the man inside and out.

Dr. Carpy called up the padre and was lucky. At least the padre was at home. As to his coming—that was something else again. Carpy held him long on the wire; he pleaded earnestly. At last he agreed to come.

At eight o'clock, the welcome splutter of the dilapidated engine was heard outside. The padre, a Gunlock buck chauffeur, and a little Indian boy of ten or twelve disembarked, and the reception committee welcomed the guest of honor to the hotel office—long well filled. And headed by the clergyman and the little fellow, the growing crowd straggled down the street to Harry Tenison's, where poor Panama lay in state on the rear-most of the pool tables.

Padre Cataldo, laying aside his hat and his overcoat of many patches, made the sign of the cross, knelt a moment in silent prayer, and, standing behind the pool table on which Panama lay in his coffin, spoke clearly and simply.

"Boys," said the old priest, "this looks like a queer place for a padre; perhaps a queer job. But I've known Bill Hayes a good many years. I knew him in his wildest days. And I've known him for the last three years, since he turned over a new leaf.

"Bill used to visit me and talk with me. It was something I said to him once, so he told me, that started him thinking. 'What's all this about—this greedy, rotten old world?' he asked him. 'That doesn't make a damned bit of all to think about?'

"Bill was not a follower of my faith—you know that. But he believed Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, and for three years he has tried the best he could to keep his commandments and persuade the boys up and down the line to do the same. He told me he wanted to try to do right where he had spent his life trying to do wrong.

"Naturally, I never heard Bill preach. But I have been told what eloquent and sincere sermons he did preach. But out there in those forgotten hills, facing—no, not facing but embracing—a dreadful death, Bill preached a deathless sermon, for he took his next from the lips of God himself. And wherever you bury him, boys, let the words of that text be graven on his tomb:

"'Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends.'"

The lull in the fire threat issued in fresh dangers to the hill ranches. A blaze starting up anew on the reservation cut-over lands crept north on the very night that Panama was buried.

With what aid she could bring, Jane rode next morning over to her neighbor's only to find the situation critical. By noon the fire fighters were being driven back all along the line. But, loath to abandon hope of saving the ranch buildings, the men fought till Denison, riding among them, warned them to look first to their own safety.

Riding then fast to the ranch house, he found Jane consulting with Quong in the kitchen.

"I must think of your safety, Jane," he said, "It is getting too close to danger here. You and Quong must go home."

"Bill, is it that bad?"

"We might as well face the truth. It's not safe here for you. You must go, and quickly. Are your ponies saddled?"

"They are."

"Then take Quong and mount up."

Jane's eyes softened. They fell before his. "I just hate to go, Bill," she pouted, tantalizingly. "It sems like deserting a friend."

"It isn't, Jane. You may imagine, girl, how I hate to send you away. But you know who I'm thinking of, don't you?"

"You mustn't think too much of anybody but yourself just now, Bill," she murmured. "I do some thinking myself these days."

Quong had been called. Always forehanded, without any words he was winking and blinking in his saddle.

Denison handed Jane her lines. She leaned toward him and spoke low:

"We Must Do Some More Running Ourselves, Jane."

"Bill, will you promise me, solemnly, one thing?"

"Promise you anything, girl."

"Solemnly, Bill?"

"Solemnly. What is it?"

"That you'll think first for your own safety. Now promise!"

"I promise, Jane."

"For my sake, Bill?"

"Do you mean that?"

"I do mean it."

"God bless you. If the buildings go, I'll ride over to report tomorrow."

The wind died that night with the bloodshot sun, as if to leave in the hearts of its victims a faint hope of escape from the worst of its ravages. Jane slept so well that she opened her eyes in the heavy air of daybreak, conscience-stricken at having rested peacefully during the hours in which her neighbor might have been burned out.

She dressed, ate Quong's hurried breakfast, saddled her pony, and set out for Denison's, directing Quong to follow as soon as he could. The smoke grew more dense as she neared the ridge, and she reluctantly turned about for home and told Quong of her failure and that she would ride up into the high hills to try to see what was going on.

She remounted and rode up the Divide trail. The smoke was so dense that it cut off hope of seeing the valley, and, spurred by the determination to see by riding higher, she rode on and on till she found herself at the foot of Gunlock Knob. Jane headed the pony up the mountain. The summit had never seemed so hard to reach, but, panting and exhausted, the pony carried Jane to the summit, and she rode out on the table to look. The scene below was terrifying. Huge clouds of smoke billowed and spread, only to boil up anew and race on the wind. It seemed as if the whole country were in flames. Here and there tongues of fire shot from the rolling smoke.

Jane sat the pony, fear-stricken and immovable, watching and hoping for a rift in the angry clouds that would reveal the ranch buildings. None came.

Weary, at length, and depressed, Jane turned her pony's head to ride home. Gunlock itself might be in danger.

Even the pony took the downward trail reluctantly. Jane could not tell why until, rounding a shoulder of the Knob, she saw below her a fire sweeping across the trail she was following. Worse than that, the fire was spurting through the brush, up the mountain, in front of her. The pony balked. Thoroughly frightened, Jane turned him up the narrow trail and headed for the summit.

Even the few moments she had been away from the top had changed the scene. Overwhelmed with consternation, she began to think anew of her own safety. She urged the pony swiftly down the trail again, hoping faintly to find some hidden by-pass. Her path was blocked. The hot air of the fire below was catching at her throat; gusts of smoke burned into her eyes. She reined about to return, despairing, to the summit.

Once again the level rock afforded her temporary refuge. She dismounted. The pony was growing unmanageable. He snorted, stamped, flung his head up and down and chewed frantically at his bit. Hope deserted her. She sank to her knees and fell forward, covering her face with her arms.

For a moment her mind was a blank. She heard nothing of a frantic calling of her name, when a singed and blackened horseman spurred and lashed his pony toward her, sprang from the saddle, and caught her up in his arms.

"Jane!" he cried, as he looked into her face and shook her in his effort to restore consciousness. "Jane! Open your eyes! Speak to me! It's Bill, Jane, Bill! Can't you hear me? Speak!" Her eyes opened; she looked in a daze at him. "It's Bill, Jane!"

She threw her arms convulsively around his neck. "Oh, Bill, Bill! What can we do? Must we die, Bill, in this horror?"

"No!" he exclaimed. "We can get through. But we mustn't lose a minute, not a second. Come!"

He half carried her to an edge of the summit, where a rock crevice gave a slight footing a few feet below. Into this he lowered himself and raised his arms to Jane.

"But the horses, Bill?" she cried.

"Leave them," he called back. "They may escape. There's no footing for horses where we're going. Quick, Jane! Jump!" He caught her in his arms, steadied her, showed her how to secure herself an the precarious footing, and lowered himself to another slender ledge to brace himself, bade her spring, and caught her again in his arms.

Her heart beat so violently, he seemed to feel it as she hugged close to him. There was barely room for the two to stand. "Keep cool, Jane. We can make it, but be very, very careful of your footing, darling Jane. The fire hasn't touched this side of the mountain yet, but if you fell it would be a hundred feet. Be everlastingly sure of every step, won't you? Never move until I tell you."

Spurned to superhuman effort, Denison achieved the almost impossible, and by sliding, clinging with fingers, hands and arms, and by carefully using his lariat, he managed to bring Jane down unharmed to the foot of the precipitous wall that had given him the bare chance to save her life. He held out his arms to catch her for the final jump. "Bill!" she exclaimed, breathing hard and looking up in sheer amazement at the precipice down which he had brought her. "How did we ever get down there alive?"

He was still very anxious—the wrinkled veins of his smoked forehead plainly mirrored that. She waited for orders. "We must run through that grove of quaking asp and try to get away from the Knob. This will all be burning in a few minutes. Are you able to run?"

"I'll bet I can run faster than you, Bill." The laughing tone of her words thrilled and cheered him. He knew better than she what still lay between them and safety. They hastened on through the light timber; then, running a broad shoulder, they saw a vast panorama of smoke, lighted in places by flames where the fires had wrought destruction in the virgin pine forests along the mountain slope.

Denison hurried on, Jane briskly keeping pace with him. But when they neared the smoking pine, she felt dismayed.

"Bill, it's all on fire, yet—look at the little blazes. See the ground pine, and the trees are smoking and burning yet. Bill! See the deer running over there—mercy, those are bear running, too—why, every animal you can think of—"

Jane was looking toward an opening in the pines, half a mile away. It was a precipitous flight of the animal life of a whole mountainside from the wrath of a forest fire.

"They'd better run," said Denison grimly. "We must do some more running ourselves, Jane. There's very little danger crossing this strip. But I want to get across it quick."

They dashed into the fire area together. Little tongues of flame darted from the still burning ground, but nothing to threaten Jane's stout laced boots or leather trousers.

They crossed the burned strip and broke together down a long slope that bordered another forest of pine.

Denison paused and looked anxiously at Jane. "How are you standing it, girl?"

She was panting, but game. Her high-colored cheeks, the flashing brightness of her eyes, her parted eager lips, made her a picture.

"Fine, Bill. Are we out of danger?"

They were standing together in the wind and smoke that swirled and eddied up the mountain. His hand was at her back as she leaned on his arm. Perhaps overwhelmed by the thought of what he must say, he hugged her close and, drawing her unresisting lips to his own, held them in a long kiss. "I wish we were, Jane. We're going only now into danger—I wish it weren't so, Jane."

Wives, Know Yourselves!—

Accurate Analysis Will Do Much to Overcome Difficulty in Wedded Life

SPEAKING on the question of trial marriages, a well known writer said, "There should be no need for trial when two people know their own abilities and have measured themselves accurately. Two people who understand themselves will never, I believe, have any difficulty living happily together after marriage."

That is a new slant on the question of success in marriage, supplements a woman writer of national fame. Not "Know thy husband" — or "wife," but "know thyself!"

And, come to think of it, isn't most of the discontent and dissatisfaction in marriage traceable to ideas of ourselves—that may be misconceptions, no less than our illusions about the other person?

How many women's dissatisfaction with their husband has as its source the thought of all they gave up to marry him, all they "might have had" if they had married a certain other man?

How many women's discontent with the role of wife and mother springs from the thought of how much more fascinating pastimes they might have had if they had followed that career?

How many girl's impossible expectations of a fulltime lover and Prince Charming originates in an exaggerated notion of their own devastating beauty and charm?

If all discontented wives would look deeply unto themselves, measure themselves, stop fooling themselves, many might discover that the other man they might have married is a self-nurtured illusion; that the career of their dreams is not a soft snap and a joy forever; but a grueling, exhausting job which might have worn them out if they had qualified for it, which they probably would have been unable to do; that they themselves are neither devastating beauties nor always charming, but women who are frequently disappointing and difficult to live with. They might discover and admit to themselves that they are greatly in debt to their husbands for many things that make life easier and better and more worthwhile—that they would not get along so well without them.

Then they might think more of doing their part of trying to make those husbands happy. And that effort on the part of one must inevitably go a long way toward a mutually happy and successful marriage.

The Greatest Man

THE greatest man is he who chooses the right with the most invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptation from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is calmest in storms, and most fearless under menaces and frowns, whose reliance on truth, and virtue, and God, is most unfaltering. —William Ellery Channing.

A man may be wrecked as is a ship. Conscience is an anchor. Terrible it is, but true, that like the anchor conscience may be carried away.

Our Lessons

When one has learned his lessons he may roam the fields and float on the river at his own sweet will; but so long as he is at his desk he must be deaf to the invitations of the sky and the woods. —Hamilton W. Mabie.

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you have headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly... try Postum. It contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened.

You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. Postum comes in two forms—Postum Cereal, the kind you boil, and Instant Postum, made instantly in the cup. Either way it is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help.
